

Cinematic, editorial, understated.

A brand that reads like a quality publication, not a coaching business. Warm, dark, grounded — the visual companion to a voice that doesn't perform.

PRIMARY COLOUR PALETTE

Midnight

#0D0C0A

Primary backgrounds and primary text. The grounding tone — used across hero sections, body copy, and editorial frames.

Gold

#B8965A

Accents, CTAs, links, fine rules and emphasis. Used sparingly — the warmth that signals depth, not decoration.

Parchment

#F7F3EC · #EDE8DF

Light backgrounds and contrast surfaces. Two warm tones for layering long-form content, lead magnets, and quiet space.

TYPOGRAPHY

The Margin Can Still Be Rebuilt

Display, headlines, pull quotes

Cormorant Garamond

Serif authority. Used for headlines, display, lead magnets, and editorial moments. Regular and italic, never bold.

I rebuilt mine. It took longer than it needed to because I didn't know what I was actually dealing with — and because nothing I tried was built for the man I actually was.

Libre Baskerville

Body copy, long-form, captions, navigation. A readable serif with slightly heavier strokes than Cormorant. Set at 1.7 line-height for breathing room.

DESIGN PRINCIPLES

No bright colour

No gradients, no neon, no decorative effects. Warmth comes from gold against midnight, not from saturation.

Generous whitespace

Clean editorial layouts. The design should feel like the voice — unhurried, precise, confident.

Grain, not gloss

A subtle grain texture overlay on web surfaces. Texture suggests material; gloss suggests marketing.
